Wright House

Fourth Quarter 18th Century and
Late 19th Century

Although its facade is partly concealed by an enclosed porch, the two-bay, two-story brick section of this dwelling is noteworthy for its Flemish bond brickwork and the exterior chimney having two sloping shoulders on each side. The latter is identical to the Figgs House nearby. Its form is like the Butler House near Ridgely and the Noble House near Hickman. Its addition is a later Victorian Gothic farmhouse nearly twice the size of the original.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

In the southernmost tip of Caroline County stands a Wright family house composed of a late 18th century two story brick house with a late 19th century two story frame section built at right angles thereto and forming the top of a 'T' plan.

The late 19th century section is a very typical late Victorian Gothic farmhouse, five bays long with a gable above the center bay and with a bay or semi-octangular gable on the south. To the west is the early and important brick section.

Although its facade is now half concealed behind an enclosed porch, the brick part of the Wright House is two bays long with central entrance. The walls are laid entirely in Flemish bond with random glazing, there is a belt of two brick courses on all sides. The arches over the window are composed of a row lock course. Its west gable has a broad fireplace protruding from the wall with two sloped shoulders on each side thereof, much like the brick house on Guard Road. Two windows flank the fireplace, but they were probably installed subsequently. No chimney is visible in the east end of the brick section.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Wright House is one of the important vernacular dwellings of Caroline County comparable to the Noble House and Ervington. Its brickwork and especially the chimney with sloped shoulders are superior examples of late 18th century craftsmanship. Its late 19th century section is a good example of the type house frequently constructed in the late 19th century throughout Caroling County.
